Where Metaphors Come From
Reconsidering Context in Metaphor

Zoltan Kövecses, Eötvös Loránd

- Recasts cognitive metaphor theory, as a contextual theory of metaphor, expanding and refining it to account for the ways in which many verbal metaphors are tied to context
- Blends psychological and linguistic theories of how context affects language use and meaning with the author's own significant work on the experiential and contextual forces that lead to metaphorical expressions in discourse
- Shows how appeals to universal embodiment in metaphor theory are not necessarily opposed to contextualist views of metaphor

Kövecses recasts CMT as a contextual theory of metaphor, expanding and refining it to account for the ways in which many verbal metaphors are tied to context.

Making Sense
The Glamorous Story of English Grammar

David Crystal, University of Wales, Bangor

World-renowned linguist David Crystal rids grammar of its undeserved reputation as a dry yet intimidating subject. Grammar poses a special challenge because of a centuries-old history of educational practice that taught the ‘how’ but not the ‘why’ of grammar. He confronts these basic yet unaddressed questions to render surprising answers: where did grammar come from? Why is it needed? What is its value? How should it be taught – and tested? And where on earth can glamour lie in all of this? The more we understand about where our grammar comes from, Crystal persuades us, the more sense it will make to us, and the more sense we will make.

The Morphosyntax of Transitions
A Case Study in Latin and Other Languages
Víctor Acedo-Matellán, Queen’s College, University of Cambridge

This book examines the cross-linguistic expression of changes of location or state. It is based on the idea that languages encode information either on the verb or on a non-verbal element such as an affix or preposition. It focuses principally on Latin, with important comparisons drawn with other language families, particularly Slavic.

Deconstructing Ergativity
Two Types of Ergative Languages and Their Features
Maria Polinsky, University of Maryland, College Park
Building upon theoretical innovations and extensive empirical findings, this book explains variation in the syntactic behavior of ergative arguments across languages. It offers a new analysis of ergativity by recognizing two distinct types, PP-ergative- and DP-ergative-languages. Each type is characterized by a set of correlated features which result in structural consistency.

The Morphosyntax of Portuguese and Spanish in Latin America
Edited by Mary A. Kato, State University of Campinas, and Francisco Ordóñez, Stony Brook University
Spanish and Portuguese were Romance languages spoken in the Iberian Peninsula and were brought to America as the languages of the colonizers in the 16th century. Along the centuries, the two languages developed specific properties that distinguish them from the varieties spoken in the Old World. This book offers a rich comparative material which helps us in the understanding of linguistic change and variation.

- Includes approaches from a range of theoretical viewpoints
- Provides data from typologically distinct languages, including Basque, Inuktitut, and Warlpiri
- Provides overviews of new experimental work on ergativity

This volume examines the phenomenon of ergativity, a grammatical patterning whereby direct objects are in some way treated like intransitive subjects, to the exclusion of transitive subjects. It includes theoretical approaches from generative, typological, and functional paradigms, as well as 16 language-specific case studies.

- Analyses data from a range of languages, including Georgian, Finnish, and Croatian
- Organized into sections that can be read independently

Multiple Exponence
Alice C. Harris, University of Massachusetts Amherst

- Provides cross-linguistic examples
- Includes much data from Caucasian and African languages
- Presents controversial explanations for why multiple exponence exists

Multiple exponence (ME) is the occurrence of multiple realizations of a single morphosyntactic feature within a word. The four most commonly encountered types of ME are characterized, and these form the basis for discussion of processing of ME, acquisition of ME, historical development of ME, and analysis of ME.

Intonation and Meaning

Daniel Büring, University of Vienna

- Examines aspects of multiple subdisciplines: phonetics, phonology, syntax, semantics, and pragmatics
- Begins with an accessible discussion of the basics of intonation and meaning
- Approaches the topic from a wide range of theoretical perspectives

This book examines the interplay between prosody-stress, phrasing, and melody-and interpretation-felicity in discourse, inferences, and emphasis. It presents the main phenomena involved, and introduces current formal analyses of prosodic structure, relevant aspects of discourse structure, intonational meaning, and the relations between them.

Gradated Modality

Qualitative and Quantitative Perspectives

Daniel Lassiter, Stanford University

- Examines an underexplored area of modal language
- Brings together two key topics in semantics: gradability and modality
- Demonstrates the connection between modality on the one hand and probability and expected value on the other

This book explores graded expressions of modality, such as more likely than and quite possible, which provide a rich and underexplored source of insight into modal semantics. The volume explores and expands the typology of scales among English adjectives and uses the result to shed light on the meanings of a variety of epistemic and deontic modals.

Language and the Structure of Berkeley’s World
Kenneth L. Pearce, Trinity College, Dublin

George Berkeley (1685–1753) was an Anglo-Irish bishop, considered among the great philosophers of early modern Europe. Pearce develops a new interpretation of Berkeley’s philosophy which emphasizes the importance of Berkeley’s revolutionary theory of language and shows that Berkeley has greater relevance to current philosophy than has been thought.

Parts of a Whole
Distributivity as a Bridge Between Aspect and Measurement
Lucas Champollion, New York University
This book uses mathematical models of language to explain why there are certain gaps in language: things that we might expect to be able to say but can’t. Lucas Champollion offers a theory that unifies the concepts of aspect, plural and mass reference, measurement, and distributivity, to account for these gaps.

Semantics and Morphosyntactic Variation
Qualities and the Grammar of Property Concepts
Itamar Francez, University of Chicago, and Andrew Koontz-Garboden, University of Manchester
This book explores why different languages have systematically different ways of saying the same thing. It focuses on adjectival predication and shows that systematic differences in the meaning of words expressing adjectival notions have systematic effects on the form of the sentences they appear in.

Proper Names: A Millian Account

Stefano Predelli, University of Nottingham

Stefano Predelli defends a semantics of proper names which has simplicity and common sense in its favour: proper names are non-indexical devices of rigid and direct reference. He grounds this view in accounts of the shape and form of names, and of their introduction within language use, and he responds to widespread misconceptions and objections.

Act-Based Conceptions of Proportional Content: Contemporary and Historical Essays

Edited by Friederike Moltmann, Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CNRS), and Institut d’Histoire et de Philosophie de Sciences et Techniques (IHPST), and Mark Textor, Kings College London

The notion of a propositional content plays a central role in contemporary philosophy of language. While the Fregean conception of propositions as mind-independent objects has dominated analytic philosophy, a number of philosophers have approached the notion of a propositional content instead by focusing on cognitive acts. The volume present a central selection of historical work and a range of new work within that perspective.

Scripturalectics
The Management of Meaning

Vincent L. Wimbush, Claremont Graduate University

In this book Vincent Wimbush seeks to problematize what we call ‘scriptures,’ a word first used to refer simply to ‘things written,’ the registration of basic information. In the modern world the word came to be associated almost exclusively with the center- and power-defining ‘sacred’ texts of ‘world religions.’ Wimbush argues that this narrowing of the valence of the term was a decisive development for western culture.

The Writing of Spirit

Soul, System, and the Roots of Language Science

Sarah Pourciau, Princeton University

Through a new history of systematic thinking across the humanities and sciences, The Writing of Spirit argues that nineteenth-century historicism wasn’t simply replaced by a more modern synchronic perspective. The structuralist revolution consisted rather in a turn toward time’s absolutely minimal conditions, and thus also toward a new theory of diachrony.

The Politics of Arabic in Israel
A Sociolinguistic Analysis

Camelia Suleiman, Michigan State University

Arabic became a minority language overnight in Israel in 1948, as a result of the Palestinian exodus from their land that year. Although it remains an official language, along with Hebrew, Israel has made continued attempts to marginalize Arabic on the one hand and securitize it on the other. Camelia Suleiman delves into these tensions and contradictions, exploring how language policy and language choice both reflect and challenge political identities of Arabs and Israelis.

Distributed Agency
Edited by N. J. Enfield, University of Sydney, and Paul Kockelman, Yale University
Distributed Agency presents an interdisciplinary inroad into the latest thinking about the distributed nature of agency: what it’s like, what are its conditions of possibility, and what are its consequences. The book’s 25 chapters are written by a wide range of scholars, from anthropology, biology, cognitive science, linguistics, philosophy, psychology, geography, law, economics, and sociology. While each chapter takes up different materials using different methods, they all chart relations between the key elements of agency: intentionality, causality, flexibility and accountability.

Sonia N. Das, New York University
Linguistic Rivalries weaves together anthropological accounts of diaspora, nation, and empire to explore and analyze the multi-faceted processes of globalization.

The Monologic Imagination
Edited by Matt Tomlinson, The Australian National University in Canberra, and Julian Millie, Monash University
The pioneering work of Bakhtin has led scholars to see all discourse as ‘dialogical.’ Contributors to this volume argue that something is overlooked with this focus. Many speakers, especially in political and religious contexts, craft monologues—single-voiced statements to which the only expected response is agreement or faithful replication.

Singular and Plural
Ideologies of Linguistic Authority in 21st Century Catalonia
Kathryn A. Woolard, University of California, San Diego
• Offers a rare English-language account of the issues around language and national identity behind the current controversial Catalan independence movement
• Includes longitudinal research perspective across the entire period of political autonomy
• Fully develops the framework for analyzing ideologies of linguistic authenticity and anonymity that has already influenced a number of sociolinguistic studies of minoritized languages

Singular and Plural develops a framework for analyzing ideologies of linguistic authority and illuminates the institutional and interpersonal politics of language in Catalonia. Drawing on ethnographic research across thirty years of political autonomy, Kathryn Woolard shows new relationships of Catalan language, identity, and politics.

Much has been written on dialect formation through contact between dialects of the same language, but the question of what happens when closely related but linguistically discrete varieties come into contact with each other has largely been neglected. Here Robert McColl Millar sets out to redress this imbalance, giving the reader the opportunity to analyse and consider a variety of different contact scenarios where the language varieties involved are close relatives and to explore the question: are the results of contacts of this type different by their nature from where linguistically distant varieties come into contact?

In Praise of Profanity
Michael Adams, Indiana University, Bloomington

- A provocative, unapologetic defense of profanity in modern society
- Weaves together linguistic and psychological analyses of why we swear - for emotional release, as a way to promote group solidarity, or to create intimate relationships - with colorful examples of profanity in literature, TV, film, and music
- Will challenge readers to reconsider the way they think about swearing

In In Praise of Profanity, Michael Adams offers a provocative, unapologetic defense of profanity, arguing that we’ve oversimplified profanity by labeling it as taboo, and we consistently fail to appreciate it as a legitimate means of expressing ourselves, either within our social relationships or in popular culture.

Raciolinguistics
How Language Shapes Our Ideas About Race
Edited by H. Samy Alim, John R. Rickford, and Arnetha F. Ball, all at Stanford University

- Brings together a critical mass of scholars to form a new field dedicated to theorizing and analyzing language and race together-raciolinguistics
- Breaks new ground by integrating the deep theoretical knowledge gained from race and ethnic studies, and the ethnographic rigor and sensibility of anthropology, with the fine-grained, detailed analyses that are the hallmark of linguistic studies
- Takes a comparative, international look across a wide variety of sites that comprise some of the most contested racial and ethnic contexts in the world, from rapidly changing communities in the U.S. and Europe to locations in South Africa, Brazil, and Israel

Raciolinguistics reveals the central role that language plays in shaping our ideas about race. This team of leading scholars-working both within and beyond the United States-shares powerful, much-needed research to help us understand the increasingly vexed relationships between race, ethnicity, and language in our rapidly changing world.

SECOND EDITION
Ingrid Piller, Macquarie University
Combining perspectives from discourse analysis and sociolinguistics, the second edition of this popular textbook provides students with a comprehensive, up-to-date and critical overview of the field of intercultural communication.

The Discourse of News Values
How News Organizations Create Newsworthiness
Monika Bednarek, University of Sydney, and Helen Caple, University of New South Wales
The Discourse of News Values breaks new ground in multimodal news discourse, offering the first book-length treatment of the discursive analysis of news values and the construction of newsworthiness. The book explores how the news is ‘sold’ (made newsworthy) to audiences through the semiotic resources of language and image, providing a new analytical framework which can be used by other researchers in their own subsequent studies.

Style, Mediation, and Change
Sociolinguistic Perspectives on Talking Media
Edited by Janus Mortensen, Nikolas Coupland, and Jacob Thogersen, all at University of Copenhagen

- Offers a coherent view of style as a unifying concept for the sociolinguistics of talking media
- Promotes an integrative view of mediated interaction, drawing linguistic, paralinguistic and visual dimensions of meaning into the same frame of reference
- Brings together new sociolinguistic studies of media discourse by leading international researchers

Mediated talk is organised around familiar styles – styles of person, relationship and genre. But media also consistently remake and re-style these familiar patterns. This book brings together original research of media styling in different national contexts and languages. It highlights and theorises how creative acts of mediated styling can promote social and sociolinguistic change.

The Art of Interpretation in the Age of Computation

Paul Kockelman, Yale University

The Art of Interpretation is about media, mediation, and meaning. It focuses on a set of interrelated transformations whereby seemingly human-specific modes of meaning become automated by machines, formatted by protocols, and networked by infrastructures. It analyzes the conditions and consequences of such transformations for selfhood, social relations, and semiosis.

Egyptian Arabic through Popular Songs: Intermediate Level

Bahaa Ed-Din Ossama, Arabic Teacher

One of the best ways to learn a language is by studying the media that native speakers themselves listen to and read, and popular songs can also reveal much about the culture and traditions of a country where the language is spoken. Here, Cairo-based Arabic teacher Bahaa Ed-Din Ossama presents twenty songs in Egyptian Arabic performed by popular singers from Umm Kulthoum to Mohamed Mounir and builds a variety of language lessons around them. The songs are graded from easiest to most difficult, and each lesson includes a link to a performance of the song on YouTube, the lyrics of the song, and notes on the songwriter, the composer, and the singer.

Language Policy and Political Economy

English in a Global Context

Edited by Thomas Ricento, University of Calgary

- Reveals the complex ways in which government leaders and policymakers, as well as communities and individuals in those communities, make decisions within a global economy about the languages that will be taught as subjects or used as media of instruction.

This edited volume will articulate a new framework for language policy research that explores the connections between language policy and political economy in its analysis of how English affects the status of other languages in countries, specifically those where English is now spoken as a foreign or additional language.
